Scientific Reviews of Marijuana

- In 2011, NORML, an organization targeting the legalization of marijuana, reported that about 200 published scientific studies of marijuana were available at year end..
- Since that time, there have been many more excellent studies accompanied by impressive research into the industry.
- Pre-clinical and some clinical compounds in the FDA are encouraging industry developments.
- Today, nausea primarily targeted a cancer chemotherapy patients, has been very encouraging.
- Appetite stimulation targeted at HIV/AIDS who are in a wasting condition has also been an exciting development.
- The field of medical marijuana appears to me to be real, one that will not only survive, but will gain credibility as the cannabinoid system is more understood.
- Research studies are of significant importance to any cannabis investor. Those companies that are able to attract capital to develop their compounds may become the blockbuster stocks of tomorrow.
