HOW TO MAKE MONEY IN THE MARIJUANA STOCK MARKET

NATIVE AMERICAN TRIBES

Insiders in the grow room industry understand that grow rooms have real trouble making money. I have heard that about 80% or more lose money. I do not know the stats, but let us assume that in general a modern grow room has enormous costs. It is a tough low margin business and is generally regarded as such.

Can Native American Tribes undercut grow rooms in legal states? Apparently they can, but the problems are complex.

John Shroyer reported last week that "Federal agents sent about as strong a message as they possibly could this week to Native American tribes looking to get into the cannabis industry: do it right, or we'll shut you down.

Agents from both the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Bureau of Indian Affairs raided a pair of grow sites on tribal land Wednesday in northeastern California, signaling that the federal government won't be completely hands-off when it comes to cannabis on reservations."

He went on to state "Federal agents sent about as strong a message as they possibly could this week to Native American tribes looking to get into the cannabis industry: do it right, or we'll shut you down. Still, several insiders who are working closely with Native Americans interested in the cannabis industry said these two small tribes brought the raids on themselves."

Native American grows have the potential to undercut the entire legal state grow industry that struggles for making money at today's retail and wholesale prices.

I am currently doing research to understand the possibility of Native American grows undercutting the heart of the marijuana/cannabis grow industry. The issues are complex. If Native American grows can operate within the law, and at the same time compete with grows in legal states, their advantage is disruptive in a marginal business.
