A Bottom for the Marijuana Stock Market?

- Stock Market Pundit, Jim Kramer believes the speculative market might have bottomed.
- I am not certain to what extent the cannabis stock market follows general stock market sentiment.
- However, today's action might signal a near bottom or a bottom.
- For the first time in many months, there appears to be some enthusiasm, more volume and better price action, especially with the well known names.
- I continue to look for this bottom, as do most marijuana investors.
- There are some potentially positive events in the coming weeks.
- The Las Vegas Conference on November 12, 2014 is certain to create a good buzz. Over 2,000 people are expected to attend.
- Elections in Oregon and Florida if positive, will also help a very dead cannabis stock market.
- In the meantime, we emphasize: take your time, do your research.
- Put your chips on market demand, management, cash, potential disruptive product offerings.
